

Net Neutrality

The internet is a public utility. It's the same as the telephone was in it's day and need to be protected in the same way. If you don't believe that everyone uses the net now, just talk to any kid.

Allowing anyone to have anything to say about access is very bad policy. Just like the ubiquitous telephone in it's day, everyone needs the net now.

Altering the rules to allow BIG users control of the utility is BIG trouble. Just like when Netflix gave Comcast (? or someone) trouble, their provider retaliated by slowing down the service.

The internet is not a place for this kind of warfare as it affect EVERYONE! ISP's must be regulated so the service and content are separate. Anything done to limit service is unfair and prejudicial.

The economic incentives to promoters of this de-regulation are self-evident. "Bought and Paid For" that's what the BIG BOYS want, screw the little guy.

We're a democracy and we all need the means of communicating to facilitate the participation and access to information that every responsible citizen needs, just like the telephone, in it's day.

Kirman Taylor
Lopez Island, WA